Back in the old days they really knew what a fun game was . . .

THE GAME OF BOUNCING BOOBIES

by Jack Price

King Louis IV liked to watch nude women at play or dancing; particularly if the girls were full-blown and buxom. The usual maid-servant of that day came from the provinces to Paris in search of work and easier living than on the farm. Many became maids and chambermaids. Some of these with "light" fingers in milady's jewel box ran afoul of the law and were confined in the prison compound. "Old Louie" devised a means of exercise for them, on advice of a close friend and courtier, while also practicing cruelty on hardened male felons jailed for long sentences.

Eight maids were caused to disrobe and hang their clothing on a clothesline in the compound yard. Four were assigned to each side of line and given a loaf of hard prison bread to toss back and forth across the clothing without it touching the ground. The felons, in wrist and leg irons, were brought out of their cells to watch the play of the bouncing and jumping females. The nudeness of the girls was a cruel thing for the men because of their natural sex desires being aroused with no chance of satisfaction. Eventually the bread loaves would crumble to pieces. Then the maids would throw these bits to the felons for their food.

The King's courtier supervisor and referee of these doings was a Monsieur Jacques Volet. It followed that the game became known as Bal de Volet, and that, dear readers, is how Volley Ball got its name. □
